Spendere con Lightning

If the Ledger Nano X only needs to get a firmware update in order to perform encryption and sending out it's seed, does that mean that technically Ledger could push firmware that tells the Ledger to send out the seed non-encrypted too? I thought the whole deal with the secure element was that it would be impossible to send/retrieve something OUT of it?

This has technically always been possible and it is the same for every wallet. Though, we have many checks and reviews on the firmware updates that we are pushing. We have and still do not allow for the recovery phrase or private keys to be sent directly out of the device.

The recovery phrase does not leave the secure element, that is true. I was talking more to the fact that firmware updates to any device can change a lot. We have a promise that we will not export your recovery phrase or private keys from the secure element. There are many checks in place inside of our company to make sure that no one person or small group would be able to push a malicious firmware update.

BTCMAP.ORG

Giovedì 18/05/2023

Episodio: 3
